Counterpress is an open access publisher associated with the website, Critical Legal Thinking (CLT) <http://criticallegalthinking.com/>. Counterpress publishes law and critical theory titles with their goal being to provide "critical legal scholars, allied theorists, philosophers, and other trans/inter-disciplinary academics an alternative to traditional book publishers." While printed books will be available at traditional and online bookstores, e-book versions will be provided on a pay-what-you-can basis, and a full open access option will be made available.

The Humanities Digital Library contains books published by institutes within the School of Advanced Study (SAS) at the University of London. SAS publications follow the HEFCE's Research Excellence Framework (REF) best practices for open access, as dictated by a School-wide open access policy.

The Digital Library is managed by the Institute of Historical Research (IHR) and Institute of Advanced Legal Studies (IALS) at the SAS.

Monograph proposals are accepted for works that fall under the categories of law, history, and classics.

De Gruyter Open access - books and journals

More than half of Dr Gruyter's journals are "pure" open access, and most have an open access option for articles. Moreover, they are also proactively converting subscription journals into open access journals and promoting open access with transformative agreements (TAs) signed with libraries around the world. As per their latest partnership with MSU Libraries, MSU authors enjoy benefits like lower APCs, better visibility, and full access to articles from 347 De Gruyter subscription journals.

Stockholm University Press (SUP) is an open access publisher of peer-reviewed academic journals and books. In partnership with our authors and series editors, we publish work within the humanities, social sciences and the natural sciences. Our main focal points are rigorous peer review, open access, affordable publishing and global dissemination.

SUP published its first books and journals in late 2014 and early 2015. It is a publicly financed non-profit operation where the main goal is to provide public access to scientific results in multiple formats, both nationally and internationally. SUP is a part of Stockholm University Library, and a member of the Ubiquity Partner Network.
